

Design of a Novel Testbed to Measure the Generated Micro Torque of a Reaction Wheels Subsystem

Alejandro Morquecho Pedraza

Laboratory of Electronic Instrumentation for Space Systems, School of Engineering,
National Autonomous University of Mexico

First, I would like to thank you for your aid in this, which was one of the best experiences of my life. My experience at the 32nd ISTS was amazing and is full of good memories.

- Trip: The logistics of the trip was very good, since I left Mexico City until I arrived in Fukui City, they always treated me very well and friendly way. However, I had a setback on the journey from Narita airport to Haneda airport, due to the train had complications and I could not arrive in time to board my scheduled flight to the city of Komatsu, so I had to take another flight later. My proposal in this case would be that you can provide us information about the fastest and most direct transport from Narita airport to Haneda airport. In general, the trip was perfect.
- Hotel: All services at Toyoko Inn Fukui Ekiame were very good, the rooms, breakfast, internet, and location were perfect.
- Symposium: The reception, the opening ceremony, technical sessions and organization were incredible, and the development of each of technical sessions was exceptional. Among the sessions I attended were: Attitude Control, Deployable Structures, Guidance, Navigation and Control (small bodies), and others. The Symposium allowed me to meet international counterparts, such as Hiraka Kotaro from Kyushu Institute of Technology, Shankar Bhattacharai from Chosun University of the Republic of Korea, and Kousuke Yamanishi from NESTY company. In addition to that, outside the Symposium, I met friendly people, I had the opportunity to meet my friend Tomoko who helped me to know interesting places in Fukui City, such as Fukui City Museum of Natural History, Asuwayama Amusement Park, Yokokan Garden, Fukui City History Museum, Fukui Castle, among others.

In conclusion, the 32nd ISTS, the organizers and all participants, as well as the city of Fukui and all its people, helped me to have an extraordinary personal and professional experience. Finally, I appreciate this opportunity very much and remain at your disposal for anything you need.

Sincerely yours,